Design Tips for Beverage Labels

If you don't have a business logo or branding, consider using a graphic designer to help create a polished aesthetic for your products. Here are some additional design tips to keep in mind:

- Our custom process allows you to go beyond the standard rectangle design and have your labels cut to any shape you'd like.
- Consider printing two beverage labels for each bottle: one for the front and one for the back. The front can prominently display your logo and the product name, while the back label will give you ample room for nutrition information and ingredients.
- If your beverage is going to be refrigerated, a gloss finish will stand up better to condensation.

Frequently Asked Questions About Custom Beverage Labels

How can I customize the shape of my beverage labels?

We offer a variety of shapes in our downloadable file templates, but if you need something different, contact us and we can work on a custom project.

What's the difference between kiss cut sheets and cut to size?

Cut to size stickers are cut through the label paper and the backing, while kiss cut sheets are only cut through the label paper portion, leaving the backing intact. If you have a large number of bottles to label, we recommend kiss cut sheets for your beverage labels, as they're easier to use.

What paper is used for beverage labels?

We use high quality white label paper to print our beverage labels.

Can I have beverage labels printed in a size not listed?

Yes, we can print custom beverage labels that fit any size bottle. Simply select the blank option in the drop-down menu for size, then use the text fields below to enter your preferred width and height.

How can I design my own custom beverage labels?

Choose the downloadable file template that works best for your needs, then use it to create your own beverage labels. Upload the file to our site when you're ready to place your order.

What is the minimum quantity of beverage labels that I can order?

EnvironPrint has no minimum quantity, allowing you to order a single label to ensure that you're satisfied with the design, your finish choice, and the shape before you place a full order.
